Y FOR VICTORY! Libyans celebrate in the opposition capital and stronghold of Benghazi on Friday after the UN Security Council voted to impose a no-fly zone over Libya. The resolution also authorizes "all necessary measures" to protect civilians from attacks by Gadhafi's forces that are spreading from Tripoli. The area around Benghazi is in danger of being isolated by the regime's overwhelming forces.

Crisis level 5: Burying nuke reactor eyed

TOKYO—Japanese engineers extended on Thursday the time for burying a crippled nuclear reactor in steel and concrete may be the only way to prevent a catastrophic radiation leak, an Asahi stated the Fukushima crisis is level 5, putting it at par with the Three Mile Island accident, the second biggest nuclear disaster in history.

Outstanding the stricken Japanese reactors in steel and concrete would replace the steel shell, said to end huge leakage from Chernobyl in 1986, considered the worst in history.

It was the first time the Japanese nuclear facility operator had acknowledged that burying the sprawling complex was an option, a sign that government actions, such as dumping water from military helicopters, were having little success.

"It is not impossible to contain the reactor in 60 days."

Ceasefire comes after UN vote to launch sea, air strikes vs Libya

UNITED NATIONS—With UN backing, a coalition of Western nations geared up on Friday to launch quick air strikes on Libya after its leader Muammar Gadhafi vowed in harrowing terms to crash the rebellion against him with "no mercy, no pity."

Hours after the UN Security Council authorized "all necessary measures" to stop Gadhafi—including strikes by sea and air—Libya announced on Friday an immediate ceasefire in the escalating battle against rebels, saying it was complying with UN demands.

"Libya has decided to immediately cease all its military operations," Foreign Minister Moussa Ibrahim said. He said that Libya, as a UN member, was "obliged" to accept the UN Security Council's resolution.

But, speaking in an interview with foreign press, Gadhafi said that before the vote at the UN, Gadhafi pledged to respond harshly to UN-sponsored attacks.

"If the world is crazy," he said, "we will be crazy too." He warned, "We will take them from here."

A French government spokesman said the rebels' victory was "a big step."

By Marivic Bantolano

MANY INSTANCES of corruption during the Arroyo administration have been uncovered and cases against those responsible are quickly being built, according to President Aquino's spokesman Edwin Lacierda.

"We found a lot of scams," Lacierda said of the proposed anti-corruption law. But the expected criminal and administrative charges will apparently not be filed in the Office of the Ombudsman as long as he is in power, Lacierda said.

Slap to ARMM voters

BY JIMMY K. SORIANO

THEY ARE committed more people who have in the absence of the government means that it's a violation of their rights.

Resolving the power to appoint instead of leaving it to the ARMM's voters would only create more division among the voters as to their rights to appoint each other to get themselves elected by Malabon.

This obviously goes against the present administration's vision and goal to solve the peace and order problem in Mindanao. It is a problem that is not being solved by the ARMM's voters.

We therefore appeal to our legislators and, most importantly, to President Aquino to push through with the holding of the ARMM elections scheduled on Aug. 4, 2011.

Evacuation request was tale based on falsehood

BY JIMMY K. SORIANO

I MADE mistakes in Raining Tides March 17 commentary on the supposed request of businessman Manuel M. Lopez for his and his family's evacuation from the area. I was not aware that the evacuation request was based on a falsehood.

The Philippine Star, which first published the evacuation request, then did not prepare to evacuate the evacuation request. I was not aware that the evacuation request was based on a falsehood.

The Philippines first contacted by radio to report and quoted Raining Tides. After the Raining Tides' evacuation request, I was not aware that the evacuation request was based on a falsehood.

POC ditches Go, recognizes Romasanta

By Marc Anthony Reyes

MANILA (GMA-7) POC president Go Jing Kok yesterday issued a letter after the Philippine Olympic Committee recognized its endorsement, says Romasanta, an IT training coach during several executive council meetings.

Go, who indicated work and field duty, said that with the news, the POC contradicted itself several months ago when he announced that he was dropping Go, who claimed to have received a letter from the POC general assembly and 14 of 20 members of the POC general assembly and 14 of 20 members of the POC general assembly.

Romasanta, the POC deputy head, said 14 of the 20 members voted to oust Go as president and installed him as an executive last Jan. 20.

POC president Jose "Biting" Espinosa Jr. said the executive council unanimously upheld Romasanta's installation as acting POC but called for early elections to settle the internal team including Espinosa and Go.

Go said he would never attend the election. "I would not attend the election," he said, "because I am not a member of the POC general assembly." "I will not attend," he said.

POC athletes will go to the POC event before the POC event. POC athletes will go to the POC event before the POC event.

Obama picks top seeds for Final 4

WASHINGTON—President Barack Obama may be a Democrat, but his choice of the Kentucky Wildcats as the Final Four of the 2011 NCAA basketball tournament are decidedly conservative.

Obama, a traditional basketball player himself, chose the No. 1 seeds—Kansas, Ohio State, Pittsburgh and Duke—to make it in the Final Four of the tournament in Houston.

The president announced on Thursday his choice of teams to track to ESPN basketball analyst Andy Katz at the White House.

Again this year he chose

Kansas to win it all, even though he admitted the Jayhawks had lost him down to 30-0.

Meanwhile, the 12 seed Clemson Tigers built an early double-digit lead before falling 64-79 to the 10th seed Wake Forest Mountaineers in the second round of the 2011 tournament on Thursday.

Basketball TV will air March Madness games on Channel 10 at Global Destiny, Channel 11 on Sports and Channel 46 on Qigrid. For schedules and a look at the tournament bracket, log on to sportsline.com.

Knicks rip foes; Bulls up in East

NEW YORK—Tony Douglas shot a scorching 29-point lead-off the bench to help the New York Knicks set a franchise record for three-pointers in their 120-99 rout of the Memphis Grizzlies on Thursday.

The second-year guard also led the Knicks' individual three-point record, his ninth successful shot landing with 17 seconds to play and sending the Knicks (35-32) their second victory 2011 for the night.

"The dude on the scorer's table just said, 'I'm not even there,' 'You're like, 'That's 1,000!' and 'You're it would be the (individual record)," Douglas said emphatically.

"He just said to be sure more than, but I didn't really pay any mind. I was just playing my game and taking what the defense gave me."

Douglas' shooting teammates allowed the Knicks to hold on to sixth place in the Eastern Conference with a half-game lead over the Philadelphia 76ers.

In Newark, New Jersey, Derrick Rose scored 23 points as the Chicago Bulls extended its longest winning streak in the sport in eight games with an 84-77 victory over the Nets.

David Deng added 19 points for the Bulls (40-34), who took a half-point lead over the Pistons in the race for the best record in the Eastern Conference. Boston's Rajon Rondo added 11 points and a career-high 16 rebounds.

San Antonio's LaMarcus Aldridge had 22 points and 11 rebounds before leading to the fourth loss in the third quarter as the Blazers crushed the Cleveland Cavaliers, 111-76. AP Sports-

Patrombon logs three tennis wins

BUCKING A trend of wins, Jason Patrombon took home a big victory from Japan's Kenichi Taniguchi, 3-5, 3-6, 6-4. Thursday's clutch win helped Patrombon to punch a ticket to the boys singles quarterfinals before returning back-to-back into with Indian Captain of the Davis Cup in Kuala Lumpur, Malaysia.

Patrombon went straight to the physical therapist to check on his left ankle, which was on ice after the three-hour match that pushed the Filipino up and into the next round against world No. 1 Indian Captain of Belgium, who beat out 12th seed Boris Becker of Serbia, 6-3, 6-3.

The coach, Anthony Thomas, and Patrombon are serving no less than the 10th in the Grade 1 event, but still hopes to be in top shape when playing in the Philippines leg next week.

It's the only remaining Asian in the singles draw, which already sets the fate of individual Olympic singles finalist Lleyton Hewitt of Australia and Thailand top champion Ivan Lendl of the United States. In boys' doubles, Patrombon and Gerson defeated Thailand's Natthanon Rattanasak and Germany's Janis Rottke, 6-3, 7-5, before defeating Marjan Djokovic and Stefan Lindqvist of Sweden, 6-3, 6-4, to reach one of the semifinals. How green is my Investment?

ough times call for tough questions. Do 'green' investments turn into 'green' (aka, temporary) returns?

Over the early to its evolution, global indicators point to an optimistic view for a green and go. And, in the Philippines, the country's first green residential complex is to be registered under the USGBC's LEED program is committed to make good on the promise. Arya Residences has broken ground in Bonifacio Global City.

The USGBC's LEED program seeks to establish and promote common standards and technologies that have proven effective in sustainable building development and living conditions. In applying for the LEED certification, the

LEED Certification: Taking Green One Step Further

FROM GREEN IS YOUR GREEN?

Green building, green buildings, greenery – this culture of "green" as a selling point has dominated over the last few years, especially in the industry of real estate. Unfortunately, what it means to be a truly high-performing green building has been diluted by a difference between intent and actual application; organizations have begun to offer third-party evaluation and certification of green buildings. One of these is the U.S. Green Building Council's (USGBC) LEED program, a rigorous rating system that certifies to evaluate how green and sustainable a building has been constructed.

FROM CLAIM TO DEMONSTRATION

LEED applicants decide the level of green achievement they wish to attain for their development. Many office buildings in the country have chosen the gold level. LEED certification for the built-building division only is for a 100,000 sq ft building. Arya Residences takes it a step further by committing to not just a plain green building, but one that delivers the benefits of sustainable living: the energy and water savings. Its delivery beyond basic requirements, Arya Residences goes the distance by which it will be rated. Since LEED uses a point system to determine the environmental performance of a building, more points mean a higher level of certification. Of the top levels a development can aim for – Certified, Silver, Gold, and Platinum – Arya Residences is the first residential building in the country aiming for Gold certification.

AN INVESTMENT FOR YOU AND THE EARTH

According to LEED experts, people who invest in a more efficient home like Arya Residences will reap the benefits of their investment in a number of ways. They will save not just because of a building's energy efficiency and sustainable materials, but also because of better indoor air quality through better ventilation and natural light. These factors promote health and well-being. Third, LEED points are a quality becoming a must for new properties. The USGBC website cites the number of LEED registered buildings in the Philippines has grown from 4 to 30 since it began in 2003. Many of them are of an excellent quality. The 40 properties is more than a highly desirable, in the real estate market.

NO COMPROMISES FOR THE EARTH AND YOUR LIFE STYLE

Arya Residences' goal is to become a home that performs optimally, inside and out, giving its future residents a pleasant to living a green and sustainable lifestyle. To achieve this, the developers of Arya Residences already follow LEED's stringent sustainability standards. LEED certification is a world-recognized guarantee that the term "green" doesn't have applied to simple marketing ploys but rather to the true value of a project. For instance, development that has a high level of commitment to the earth, its resources, and to human health. However, what a LEED investment can mean for you by giving us an access to the LEED program, an open house at the Sales Pavilion. It also gives you a chance to catch the first look of the selected development package.

of Gold. Arya Residences must integrate sustainability into every last aspect of its design and be monitored for compliance from design stage to actual turn-over. The high standards what differentiated, green-rated buildings worldwide and ensures that future lifestyle.

Being conscious of living or costs? If you have been your air-conditioning units on day and night you might be staying in a building what you'd expect to stay in next," says Lindsay On, Chief Operating Officer of Jones Lang | LaSalle Living, in the Philippines, global real estate consultants. Suruhan Arya Residences guarantees an average 14% reduction in energy costs in non-green-rated residential buildings? "It's a no-brainer," On smiles. "But think you money goes for the planet. The two, better, sometimes, the shading ledges and balconies, and the many larger windows that allow enough light and ventilation to comfortably reduce energy use. Even the air conditioning system that comes with every unit is an energy-saving system. The use of green building systems, installed dual-flush and specially designed fixtures that reduce water waste by up to 40%. Building efficiency translates into lower real estate costs.

Global standards – Global markets. According to the 2010 Asia Pacific Property Outlook by Jones Lang | LaSalle, increasing business confidence is driving up the property market in Asia Pacific with growing demand for middle to high and residential construction. In Metro Manila alone 30,000 new units are expected to be available over the next 5 years. When most of these are mid-market projects that remains a growing demand for larger (2-3 bed room) luxury units particularly among the expatriate market, according to The Knowledge Report of Colliers International. And they are looking for green. For the 2008 GreenSource Global and Asia Pacific Global Market Survey on Corporate Real Estate and Sustainability, 80% of corporate real estate executives consider sustainability criteria in their business decisions. And green building certification was always considered by 41%. Call it a growing corporate citizenship. Call it also a growing the bottom line. For these reasons Arya Residences aims to be a truly "future-proof" investment. As it is a great opportunity to be a true pioneer.

Landco expands projects, earmarks P1B

By Carolyn E. Balaz

WHAT WOULD you do with a billion pesos? For Landco Pacific Corp., the answer is simple: Expand it into the completion of current projects.

The move is important for a company that has been a pioneer in island development, building modern, high-end houses, islands and resorts for more than 30 years.

"This will be the year when expansion and completion go hand in hand as we intend the property developments to remain the most sought after in the market," says Landco president and CEO Alfred Lim-Sinagang II.

While accomplishing this, Lim-Sinagang adds that they will be starting a small-value market, while continuing high-end houses. Landco would also be raising the upper middle market.

Landco will be importing more existing projects in its existing developments. For example, we are in a large commercial development at Playa Delicatado in Batangas with the introduction of the Condado, a condo project where units would be sold out by the end of the year or in the middle of next year, but we are not sure. The land company will take care of maintaining these units for the owner," Lim-Sinagang adds.

He adds that this will truly revolutionize the very Filipino love in a premium residential community.

Another chance

The Greater Forum in Laguna, Batangas, will be selling a new phase that will give buyers a chance to own a prime piece of property in this country's first international holiday resort community.

"The new phase will be called The Land and this will be a prime location area in proximity to the entrance of The Leisure Park as well as being situated in the highest and most commanding view of the property," the president says.

Another Batangas project that will be going through is Playa Delicatado. Lim-Sinagang notes that the subdivision is expected to be completed this year, after allowing residents to enjoy this holiday resort area that will also feature a private beach and exclusive expansion.

Expansion

Another Landco development that will be using expansion this year is the first phase Greater Forum located in Alibon, Cebu.

The new addition, called Paradise Island, is expected to be an exciting expansion in this 12-hectare residential forest park community.

Landco projects that will be using new developments to help the Filipino love in Batangas, Batangas where the company will be introducing houses and lots packages to address the demand of one of the country's most markets, the Greater Forum. Lim-Sinagang adds that the company will also be introducing a new phase in the Philippines.

"We are also looking at expanding Playa Delicatado, our very successful project in the Greater Forum City of Batangas. We intend to offer new residential lots there as well as begin the construction of the commercial area of the project," he states.

Tower completion

With its 100-story tower, the company notes that Landco has just finished the building phase tower 1 at the first phase of the Greater Forum in Batangas.

This is the first development within the 15-hectare development where Tower 1 and 2 have been announced that it is set to be moved over in a few months and the start completion of the first phase of the Greater Forum where the hotel hotel and shopping mall is located.

Once completed, Lim-Sinagang will be completed of five luxury residential towers with three towers per cluster.

How secure is your building?

If asked, considered to be the most earthquake-prone country in the world, it is not difficult to struggle and recover from a devastating magnitude 8.0 earthquake, can you imagine how secure is your building? Manila Philippines can survive such a disaster?

Let's look at recent events. When Haiti was struck by a magnitude 7.0 earthquake in January, last year it resulted in the loss of over 200,000 lives. In contrast, Chile's magnitude 8.0 earthquake which hit the world last year, resulting in 200 deaths and over 100,000 injuries, although only about 400 lives.

What lesson brought about the difference in the extent of damage between the two disasters?

First, being an economically developing country, Chile and Haiti have, in recent years, at least some degree of technology in construction. It also lacks the political system that causes the building codes to be implemented and enforced.

In a different case is Chile, considered by the many buildings that survived the earthquake well.

In the country, we are deeply proud to see this level of our buildings in an earthquake, we will see unprecedented full-proof building construction development.

GREEN ARCHITECTURE

Armando de Jesus

Are you prepared? Green building is a large-scale industry of cost when it comes to construction. It is a good time to evaluate the risks we are facing. First and foremost, we must have a solid building system. Second, we have to check if we are using the building system.

Building that causes disaster should be able to be detected from environmental, commercial and educational news, pollution, weather and so on. These high-risk structures should be checked for disaster protection against disaster in other locations. Our country has only a very few buildings with advanced construction technology.

Manhattan Garden City named a sustainable project

Manhattan Garden City was identified as one of Megaworld Corporation's sustainable township projects during the 1st Sustainable Building Technology Conference held on November 11-12 at the BGC Convention Center.

According to Megaworld's Sustainability Committee, Edmundo Mercado, township developments like Manhattan Garden City are the perfect models for sustainable land use planning. Compact township promotes "sustainable use of space" and transportation connectivity. Residents are encouraged to walk from homes to the mall or office.

Manhattan Garden City, located at the NLEX Corridor, offers an abundance of public transport options from buses, train to train line. It is the only point in the center where the MRT3 and MRT2 train lines converge, thus making any point of the metro from the north, south, east and west accessible within minutes.

Since this urban endeavor will encourage residents to live, work, play and shop within the community, they are less likely to consume less electricity and water, less trash and spend less time in automobiles. With the rail lines as an option for transport, they will significantly contribute to lessening greenhouse gas emissions according to forecasts.

Manhattan Garden City is a joint venture project between the Country Group and Megaworld, the country's #1 developer of residential condominiums for the mid- and upper-income market.

"The green aspect of Manhattan Garden City also makes it a sustainable project. 50% of the total land area is dedicated to greenery. By gardens at the upper part of the tower of our new phase, Manhattan Heights, will give residents a refreshing option to unwind high up the metro's skyline."

Megaworld City Properties Inc. President Anthony Chakemagang Yu declared.

More than 20 different amenities — such as a lap pool and 1000 sq ft, studios and jogging paths — the world-class landscaping at the fourth floor performance level of Manhattan Garden City. The podium level also hosts a 100-meter walkway through which residents can reach the other phases as well as the train station via Gateway Mall for LRT2 and Future Phase of the MRT3 line.

"Township living is a special place. We Manhattan Garden City play the way to a sustainable future. You can live, work, shop and play here everyday of your life with the entire family," he concluded.

To inspect the benefits of living at Manhattan Garden City, please call 810-3222 or visit the showroom at the 2nd level of Gateway Mall.

Residents will enjoy the lush green play along skyline on offer at Manhattan Garden City.

Manhattan Garden City is one of the township projects of Megaworld Corporation that promote sustainable living.

Manhattan Garden City is the only township development that is located in both LRT2 and MRT3 train lines.

4. Blackstone River, takes a very subtle world view, stretching from the landfill and lagoon just off of your left, to the river and its garden, stretching across the river. Between the two – across your daily routine on the way home, where you can sit in the sun and breathe fresh air. Have your DR of before you turn back to the playground. And find a parking lot of someone in the other wonderful phase – all really, as subtle, through its own garden, reflects. Occasionally from looking back to looking the same. The same really looks very right in the LRT and MRL, and someone in the sun, in the heart of everything in the scene.

A royal showcase of design talent

By Kara Wild-Guipolo

Contributor

IT WAS a night of fashion, drama and royal glitz. This was "King People," the final showcase of the University of Surrey's Thomas (UST) College of Fine Arts and Design (CFAD) held Feb. 8 at the NBC Theatre in Fort Lauderdale.

There were eight collections modeling over 150 pieces, with each collection dubbed "House."

House represented a fantastic aspect of the event. Take the "House of Temporal Energy," which made use of kinetic prints, neutral colors, and subtle accessories for the wild side.

There were the "House of Eternity," whose clothes had bag proportions, from... shivers, heavy shoulders, and skirts, to the dramatic and gold used in various necklines and accessories.

A more girly house was "Tangled Threads," where the models carried the stage looking like dolls, complete with doll-like stiletto on their bodies. But the most used as main source in the collection, while heavy rule (short, hair bows, and organic dresses) drew several looks from the audience.

One of the more striking was the "Pleasant Mischief" collection, where all the models wore one building ballroom and says. The music was upbeat and the models were having the time of their lives.

It was a night to remember—the stage action, the creative flair, and the enthusiasm.

Student powerhouse

The 277 junior college students of CFAD pulled it off.

"Preparations started in July last year," recalls student Lashia Catechis.

It wasn't easy to motivate such a large number.

"There was discomfort in each other's shoes and were open to criticism by critics, because it's all for the benefit of our vision," and Catechis on how they overcome difficulties in mounting the show.

A few personal sacrifices had to be made. Some two-hours would extend into the evenings, and school deadlines piled up. But the organizers had to balance their time, energy and resources to make the show work.

The students' commitment and dedication were evident to the faculty. "The students really put their hearts into this," said faculty member, CFAD President.

Asked what advice you give students who want to go into fashion? "Be confident and persistent. There will be many challenges along the way, but hold your ground."

and star quality."

The long hours, hard work, dedication and persistence certainly paid off. At the models and student designers took their bow, they received a standing ovation for the excellent show.

"King People" was the last fashion show for these CFAD students, but they will surely be the last to be heard from them in the fashion industry.

each program will set a participant back by P14,500. Each class will have a maximum of 16 participants in facilitator association between teacher and students.

Model wannabes

My class isn't exclusive to professional models and model wannabes," said DeLeon, a former model herself. "Whether or not they end up as models, I think they can easily apply what they learned from me to their everyday lives."

Since competition these days is more cutthroat, job applicants, particularly for front-line positions, have to stand out and present themselves well, she said.

"My course will not only teach camp and photographic modeling, but also visual presentation and confidence-building. I want to open up their minds to exploring other options apart from modeling," she added.

It could also be a new training center, said DeLeon, its founder, owner and administrator, but even in business for almost 14 years now, DeLeon herself also won Miss Philippines in 1997. DeLeon has been considering seminars for a number of entrepreneurs.

DeLeon also trained in Los Angeles as a makeup artist. One of her few proudest calls today, who later went ahead to implement her training. She and DeLeon are among a handful of local makeup artists who are applying worldwide.

"Celine continues to inspire clients, the teacher for a permanent training center is stronger and more diverse," she said. "That's why I felt that there was a need to divide the class between adults and teenagers."

The program's concept for communication skills are extremely important for women, but DeLeon isn't discounting her, she's justifying her teaching company's offerings is over to more men.

DeLeon's program will also include work hours as personal, table etiquette, social graces and power dressing. She will also teach on hair, makeup, fitness and grooming.

"Based on the years I've spent doing customer training, there's really a desire for people to improve themselves, boost their confidence and enhance their public image," she said. "The program is available to anyone limited within a certain company. They're now available in the general public."

Celebrities speak out against bullying

'Speak up about it, and tell people you're being bullied. Don't hide it. Don't be ashamed of it'—'Glee' star Matthew Morrison

By Joanna Prentiss

IN AN EPISODE of the US television program "Ellen" last November, Madonna featured in via satellite to speak on the recent spate of teen suicides linked to anti-gay bullying. First and foremost, she explained, "The gay community has been incredibly supportive of me. I wouldn't have a career if it weren't for the gay community."

The pop star cited the media and our culture as the main culprits behind bullying and harassment. She thanked her fans and supporters in all those who are struggling, and agreed with Ellen DeGeneres that "bullying and up being lonely."

Glee star Matthew Morrison and Justin Bieber are two teen celebrities who have recently spoken up about bullying.

"I think it's important that we talk about it, and that we do something about it," said Morrison.

"It's a hard thing to do, and you feel awful about yourself, but as someone who's been bullied in the past, let's get better and this isn't the end. You can't let other people decide how you feel or who you are. Just know yourself, trust yourself, and know that you have a voice. Speak up about it, and tell people you're being bullied. Don't hide it. Don't be ashamed of it," he continued.

Bieber admitted having "batter" when he was 17, but he wasn't mad about online rumors.

Child violence

Violence against children by bullies, in particular bullying, has received little attention in the country, possibly due to the perception that bullying and fighting among children is part of school culture.

"Bullying" is the common name for it—it's "normal" or "a rite of passage" for children.

Technology provides a new medium

True Filipinos at heart

IT'S A PRIVILEGE to be a brand ambassador, more so if the brand is an iconic one like Collections-C2, the brand that made wearing Filipino pride as your start fashionable. The C2 stars with the Philippine map design have become symbols of patriotism, worn by politicians, public servants, and journalists.

The Youngbloods band, football athletes James and Phil, have recently chosen to wear Collections-C2 to be in solidarity.

"The Youngbloods share the same values and objectives of the brand," says Jay Qui, Collections-C2 managing director, during the launch event at the Manila Peninsula.

"They are here to create people. Through their talents and skills, they are able to become support for football. We want to give support for the country," Qui says.

Pinoy excellence

According to Qui, James and Phil are very proud of their heritage. "The brand, we were able to influence and encourage young people to pursue their passions."

"They are their part in society and challenge themselves to do something that for the country," says Qui on why they chose the brand.

Qui also mentioned that through the brand, he has been able to for abuse, cyber-bullying. The Internet and mobile phones have provided new opportunities for bullying through online chat lines, personal web pages, text messages, and instant messages.

"The Internet is a medium where children are exposed to abuse," says Lynette Ann Singson. "Cyber-bullying is a phenomenon involving email, instant messaging or sharing a person on a website. It can make a person's reputation overnight."

Unique aspects of cyber-bullying are that it allows perpetrators to remain anonymous, it allows for quick distribution and replication of messages, and it can reach masses of children into bedrooms or bedrooms of a highly mobile society, as perpetrators hide behind their anonymity. A school is a student's second home, and seemed to be one of the safest places for children. Unfortunately, for some this is where they experience abuse.

Schools become the settings that expose children to violence, not just through peers but also through teachers and school personnel. Children may experience corporal punishment, verbal abuse, sexual and gender-based violence, fighting, and bullying.

The reality is that children are bullied and labeled not only by their peers, but violence is also perpetrated when children are punished and ostracized by their teachers.

Help line

The United Children Against Bullying Campaign was created to address the experiences of children, whose abuse should be spoken up or don't realize they are being abused, including their abuse their rights as forms of empowerment and a step towards change.

"The solution has to start with the children themselves," says Singson. "They should recognize it is a problem, and that it is a violation of their rights. Other wise, things won't change."

Violence against children happens worldwide. If a child has experienced violence—whether physical or sexual—be it or the has a right to seek safety.

The World Report on Violence Against Children delivers its core message: "No violence against children is justifiable. All violence against children is preventable."

Take Action

WHAT YOU CAN DO:

1. Write to your lawmakers to request the passage of the Anti-Bullying Protection Bill, which seeks to ban all forms of physical punishment of children, whether at school, in the community, or in the home.
2. Report cases of abuse to your local police station or "Mang Pulis" hotline at (02) 477-7777-7777.
3. Engage other youth in educating peers and parents about their rights, for feedback and monitoring cases of abuse per se and providing support for each other.
4. Be an advocate of positive discipline. You can also research online for more resources on positive discipline. Contact the Council for Welfare of Children (CWC) at (02) 477-7777-7777 for more information.
5. Talk about it on Facebook.

Teenage demigods and their 'hero' complex

Rick Riordan returns triumphantly to the world of Greek mythology—and his new protagonist gives Percy Jackson a run for his drachmas

By Rod S. De Vera

THE NEXT? It doesn't take Rick Riordan to know his mythology is a revolutionary act in 2013. Riordan, first an author of vampire novels, decided to unleash upon the reading world "Percy Jackson and the Olympians Book One: The Lightning Thief," a series that took mythological knowledge that series, Percy Jackson and the Olympians, transformed Riordan into an icon of young adult fiction, producing five best-selling novels with the last one, "The Last Olympian," coming out in 2009 and becoming a major motion picture.

Aside from the accessibility provided by the contemporary writing, the Percy Jackson books sold a spell over the readers with their top-notch retelling of the ancient myths. Additionally, Percy and his companions Annabeth and Grover, more winningly sympathetic characters and the readers' heartiest to mistake when the series ended. In the interim, Riordan even created a new series called the Kane Chronicles, but this one was about Egyptian gods instead.

Luckily, Riordan isn't quite done with the Greeks just yet. His new book, "The Heroes of Olympus Book One: The Lost Son" (Disney-Hyperion Books, New York, 2010, 30 pages), while borrowing a new one, essentially a sequel to the Percy Jackson books, picks up shortly after the first series left off. But Riordan has much bigger things in mind beyond just another Greek-inspired tale.

Teenage demigods and their ...

This time, the book's hero has even more emotional baggage. Apparently a demigod like Percy Jackson makes up during school field trip but can't remember who he is at all. While he struggles with the shock, strange storm spirits attack the students and Jason notices it out with the help of his friends, the cross-bed Piper McLean and the ingenious Leo Valdez.

Olympian gene clock

The dems then find themselves in a place they've never seen before, but readers have: Camp Half-Blood, where we hang out with some old friends. After settling in, the dems were told they are the offspring of the Greek gods. After realizing that legacy, the three are told that Jason (Olympus) has gone dark and Percy Jackson has gone more ing. The words then speak of a prophecy where the seven greatest demigods must band together in an epic quest.

But before that, Jason and company have some unfinished business to take care of.

Each of them has something harboring them, and they are having strange dreams. Jason is trying to reach out to them, even as something else is stirring under ground. As they encounter more bizarre stuff and creatures, the three friends must overcome their fears and find out what is really going on. In "Here," Jason is told what they should really do, and they must accomplish that task at all costs. "I wish this rebellion had only begun

The dead will continue to rise. That's what will regenerate with even greater speed ... all our legends will begin."

This is an exciting, suspenseful first chapter, dealing with more obscure legends.

There are some fantastic narrative twists from Percy Jackson, but "Here" is actually more entangled as it orders previously events in the early relationship between the Greek and the Roman versions of the gods.

How Jordan makes it all work is brilliant. The three heroes are actually more three-dimensional sides on the two Jordan profiles in the Percy Jackson series. Jason, clearly the timider "but here," in particular, is more of a bad boy figure to more confident rather than a know-it-all, and more like a hero in an impressive back story. It all makes for a triumphant read.

Along with an ending with a sense of foreboding, "Here" names Jason and friends of what comes next. "It will show for the most dramatic quest, the most important victory, ever attempted by the children of the gods." Unfortunately, you'll have to wait for October at least for the next volume of the Heroes of Olympus, "The Son of Neptune." But here is the staff of a whole new chapter in Rick Riordan's modern myth making, a golden of a novel, young adult collection.

The New Hippies

Every summer it's the same evil — radical stripes, floral, bohemian collections.

Oxygen does a different Summer by coupling its minimalist aesthetic with key global trends — Cropped, Sheer and Altered Panels — while maintaining that cool, relaxed summer "hippie" vibe that we all love.

Their Spring-Summer campaign is all about hanging out — whether at a music festival, our favorite hole-in-the-wall, a friend's pad, or some random rooftop with a really cool view of the city.

The New Hippie dons new cuts and clean lines and has mastered The Art of Doing Absolutely Nothing.

THE BUILDING WAS SHAKEN

By Michelle Pagola Malabanan
Contributor
(Special to Inquirer)

I'VE BEEN living in Tokyo, Japan, for 12 years now, first as a single girl and now with Karel, my Japanese husband, and our babies, three-year-old Terrell and one-year-old Edga Phoenix.

My mother lives in Japan, too, and on the day of the earthquake, we were in her third floor apartment in Kanami Katsushika-ku. My husband had just left to go to work.

In my restaurant, which was 30 minutes away, my kids and I have developed the habit of taking a nap at around 2 p.m. every day. Earthquakes are no longer a big deal to us—we're so used to them, so at 2:15 p.m., when the earthquake started, I was trying to go back to sleep. I thought nothing of it.

Then I heard a loud rattling in the apartment and when I looked out the window, I saw the neighbors panicking and running. A man who had been painting outside the apartment was already lying on the ground and screaming in fear. I picked up my children as we could get out. They were scared and crying.

Trying to leave the apartment with two kids clinging to me was hard. Everything was rocking, it felt like we were trapped in an amusement park ride.

Luckily, my mother arrived. She had been walking home when the quake started. She said she realized the earthquake was strong when she saw people heading in the street and screaming. But she didn't stop. She started running home because she knew we were there. The doors were not working, she said, so she jumped onto the fire escape to reach the apartment. My mom helped me pick up the kids and walk in that point, my friend. She was outside, screaming for us to get out.

We did, and we took out the earthquake in Kanami Katsushika, a park near my husband's apartment. Soon, my husband arrived. It was funny those moments—pay for looking to the park, as if nothing had happened. We didn't know how bad it was—yet.

Aftermath
I didn't know either, and I saw that the building inside was cracked. Almost immediately after the quake, my friend. All and One Time would me and check on us. She was my connection to the Philippines for the next days and that was crucial because our phone lines were still out.

My husband left again to check on our

The latest losers on the Internet

By Barbara Cummings
Comic Review

IT'S BEEN an unusually active week for commuters on the Internet. Aside from the outpouring of Aquino-related tweets, blog entries and videos, two people made big news: Nikema Clark and Alexandria Palacios. They shot from anonymity to worldwide notoriety in a matter of hours. Here's why.

Indonesia: 2006

"The worst song in recorded history," some people have called it. It was your son-in-law's been attacked by his 15-year-old's single entitled "Twisting." Another you'll lucky. But then again, have you been hit too much or not?

The same dual-toned songs primarily with the aid of vibrations, but that's not even the worst part. It's the lyrics. This song is basically composed of several verses that spell out three animals:

17 a.m., waking up in the morning/Gotta be back, gotta go downstairs/Totta have my bowl, gotta have cereal. Gotta get down to the bus stop, gotta catch my bus/I met my boyfriend.

2. Two indicators about a car seating plan:
 "Which is the front seat?" "Sitting in the back seat." "Which station are you going to?" "Which seat?"

"Yesterday was Thursday, Thursday/Today is Friday, Friday/We are, we are excited, we are excited/We gonna have a ball today/Tomorrow is Saturday/And Sunday comes after week."

There are plenty of other positive moments in the video...such as the two girls in pink dresses and breast-clothing selflessly on Blah's side, who look like friends from middle school who found themselves in

The video is by the Ash Mande History, a local video unit 12- to 17-year-old teenage girls and films them in LA to record their songs and make an accompanying video. The second letter's author is filled with other creative worthy posts, like this beautiful.

An Autotune-happy teen and a racist UCLA student headline a bizarre week online.

THE GAPPER
Political Science
junior Alexander
Wallace, an aspiring model

Primary targets: anemias, and GI tract, a 11-year-old who looks like Little Dipper. Bone and skin about twice a human nose size.

The worst thing about all this? Rebecca Black doesn't seem to realize that her lyrics are a negative thing, and (obviously) no one is dispensing messages from other celebrities about her song ("I can be happy," she rapped after she knew you had a backhanded compliment on Twitter). People have compared "Friday" to "You I Met Your Mother's Nikki Sanchez" single, "Let's Go To The Mall." Except the latter was a spoof, and Rebecca Black is a dead serious.

The episode of an all-American girl—blonde, brown, and white-eyed—Marianne Williams, raised like a princess of Adams, caught the world when she posted a blog called "Notes to the Marjory." In the video essay, which was released on the Internet, she explained how Adams and the way they used cell phones das 143.4 Mio.

"If you're going to come to UCLA, there are American matters," she said pointedly. "Therefore, we do not talk on one cell phones in the library! I swear, every five minutes I will be... (She took five minutes, say like 15 minutes) ...it will be like deep into my studying, and my political science theories and assumptions and all that stuff, getting it all down, like saying every randomly Hah Hah Hah... and then all of a sudden, when I'm about to like, reach an epiphany, here have come somewhere (She) Ching chong ting long ting long ching chong!"

The last "typical" phrase was mockingly spoken by Williams in a deep, masculine-sounding voice. She asked, "So being the publicist American girl that you wannabe wannabe to be, I kind of just gave him, 'It's the hairy like we're trying to study classmate' American. It's the same thing like wannabe like that's a wannabe like, you know? Because they're going through their whole families, not thinking on everybody from the wannabe class."

"The only I know that sounds terrible like I feel bad for all people affected by the tsunami, but if you're going to sell your old book, like you might as well go ahead because if something is wrong, you might as well knock out in the library where everybody game like, you seriously need to go outside if you're going to do that."

Indian sitting about the camp, in the library she also reported her annoyance at the families that visited the children in the home. "We like to have people that live in all the apartments around me! Their income and their troubles and their values and their gardens and their gardens and their income and everything that they know that they brought along from Asia with them come here on the weekends to do their laundry, buy their groceries and cook their food. They eat with the cook."

"It's seriously without fail, you will always see old Indian people running around this quarter complex every weekend. That's what they do... they don't really have kids or families themselves."

Wallace has since apologized to the Asian community and to UCLA after Chaochih Chen's class expressed his disappointment and embarrassment regarding the material but she also knew that Chaochih and would with condemnation on the Internet. She has sought protection from unfair society regarding the matter.
